Switch suppliers to save money on bills

A free service recently launched can show people in Heathcote and surrounding areas how to get cheaper electricity and gas.

The creators of Switchselect.com, Leon Hayes and Steven Glover, said with consumer confidence plummeting, the new, free, impartial service, which allows individuals and families to compare many of the electricity and gas deals, had the potential to save people money.

“We never guarantee savings to consumers, but, because many deals are being compared on the website, people should be able to find a deal which can save them money,” Leon said.

“The new service has been launched following the deregulation of the power industry.

Leon was originally based in the UK and, after deregulation happened there, services like Switchselect.com started to appear at a rapid speed to show consumers how to get a cheaper and better deal.

“Put simply, we show consumers on our website numerous available prices of many suppliers,” he said. Steven said the business allowed consumers to see what was really going on with prices.

“Our service is about showing people deals so they can compare them,” he said.

“To keep the service free for customers, we get a small fee from any switching that happens. It’s the same fee for all power companies.” To switch, people have to provide their postcode, current supplier and usage details. A recent energy bill will also help.

By following five steps on the website at www.switchselect.com people can switch in about five minutes and all information is secure.
